[Note: Privet has been suggested to be a corruption of pruinet, a word erroneously said in Prior's Names of Plants to occur in the Grete Herball as a name of the primrose, no such word occurs there. Another suggestion is that privet (e. prive, are the same as pruete, pruy, and applied to this shrub from its use in making hedges to cut off a private part of a garden, to conceal dung-heaps, etc., but of this there is no evidence. Privet or Pruiet occurs more than once as a place name in Hampshire, and the name Profettes Joda, app. in that county, is found in the O E Chron; but no connexion of this with the shrub is known. Pruiet also occurs in a 12th c. deed, where it is doubtful whether it is a proper name. 1256 June 8 *Ancient Deed P. In these senses it has received further differentiation, becoming PRIZE in the commercial sense of 'set a price to', and remaining as prize only in sense 3 below. (But this last differentiation has hardly yet been completed, for in dialect, local, and individual use, to prize or prize is often said instead of to price, even when the latter is written - of the distinction of sb. and vb. in advance, to advance, house, to house, use, to use.)]

Pro, prefix. 1 The Latin adv. and prep. (see above), used in combination with verbs and their derivatives, and sometimes with other words not of verbal derivation.

(Unlike the Gr pro-, the L was originally and usually pro-; but in some compounds it was occasionally and in others usually or always shortened to pro-.)

A large number of Latin words so formed were retained in popular use in French (as in the other Romanic langs.); many others were taken into French in earlier or later times as learned words, and were thence taken into English. In later times words of this kind have been adopted or adapted in English directly from Latin, or have been formed immediately from Latin elements.

In OF the prefix had often the popular form por-, pur-, four- (see PUR-), but this, in many words, was subseq. changed back to the Latin form in pro-.

1. As an etymological element. The following are the principal uses in Latin and English. (All words of this class appear as MAIN words.)

a. Forward, to or towards the front, from a position in the rear, forth, out, into a public position, as proclamare to call out, proclamare to lead forth, proferre, proferre to put forth (PROFUSE), proferre to throw forth, proferre, prominere to put out (PROMINENT), prominere to speak out, pronounce, pronuntiare to put forth, pronuntiare, proferre, proferre to thrust forth, proferre.

b. To the front of, down before (the face of), forward and down; as procedere to fall forward or down (PROCEDENCE), proclivis sloping downward, proclive, proclive to tramp down, proculcare, proculcare to fall down forwards (PROCUMBENT), profligare to dash down (PROFLIGATE), profligi, profligi to slip down forwards (PROLAPSE), proster-, proster- to strew or lay flat before one, to PROSTRATE.

c. Forth from its place, away, as prætere to give away, betray (PRODITUM), prætere to drive away, dissipate (PRODIGAL), prætere to flee away (PROFUGAT).

d. Forward, onward, in a course or in time, as procedere to proceed, processus PROCESS, procrastinare to defer till the morrow, procrastinare, progrederi to step forward, progressus, prominere to drive onward (PROMENADE), promovere, promovere to move onward, promove, promote, promovere to drive forward, propel.

e. Out, with outward extension, as productus able to be drawn out, productus, prolixus PROLIX, propterea to plant out, propagare, protrahere, protrahere to drag out, protract.

f. Before in place, in front of, as prohibere to hold in front, hold back, prohibere, proscribere to write in front, proscribere, prolegere to cover in front, prolegere.

g. Before in time, in anticipation of, in provision for, as prolegium PROLEG, prologus to speak before (PROLOGUE), providere to foresee, providere.

h. For, in preparation for, on behalf of, as procurator gnt for, procurator, procurator to take care for, procurator, procurator wished for, procurator, procurator to do service to, procurator.

i. With worn-down or obscure force; as procerus tall, procerus, profundus PROFANE, profundus deep, profoundus, proles offspring (PROLETAIRE), proletaria to deserve, proletaria, promiscuus mixed, promiscuus, proverbum PROVERB, provincia PROVINCE.

2. Frequently prefixed in Latin to names of relationship, answering to Eng. 'great' or 'grand', F. grand and petit; as avus grandfather, pro-avus great-grandfather, avunculus aunt, father's sister, pro-avunculus great-aunt, grandfather's sister, gener son-in-law, progener grandson-in-law, granddaughters's husband. So pronepos great-grandson, great-nephew, pronepos, pronepos, pronepos great-granddaughter, great-niece, pronepos, pronepos.

3. Pro- for PRE-, PRE-. In late and mediæval Lat. pro- was sometimes substituted for pre-, pre-, partly through confusion of sense, partly perhaps under the influence of words from Greek, such as prologus, propheta, proscenium. Examples of this are frequent in ME, where, however, as in MED. L. MSS., it is often difficult to say whether pro- was intended, or was merely a scribal or copyist's error, due to confusion of the written e and a. Examples will be found among the cross-references.

II As a living prefix

4. In Latin pro- in the sense 'for', 'instead of', 'in place of', was prefixed to a sb, app. originally in prepositional construction, as pro consul (one acting) for a consul, afterwards combined with the sb, as proconsul=deputy-consul; so prodictator, proflamen, pro gubernator, prolegatus, promagister, propraefectus, propraetor; also in a few names of things, as pronomen PRONOUN, prothibula deputy-guardianship.

English has examples of pro- prefixed a. to names of persons (officials or functionaries), 'acting as deputy', as pro-Grand Master, pro-guar dian, pro-legate, pro-provincial, pro-provost, pro-regent, pro-seneschal, pro-tetrarch, pro-treasurer, pro-tribune, pro-warden, etc.; also PROCONSUL, PROPROCTOR, PRORECTOR, etc. b. to names of things, as pro-reality (something serving the purpose of a reality), pro-sb, pro-verb [after pronoun], etc.; also PRO-CATHEDRAL, PRO-LEG, etc. c. to an adj, as pro-e-thical, serving as a substitute for what is ethical, pro-sb substitute (see quot.): hence pro-substantively adv.

1892 H. SPENCER Princ. Ethics I ii 11 § 133 237 We must class them as forming a body of thought and feeling which may be called 'pro-ethical', and which, with the mass of mankind, stands in place of the ethical properly so called. 1902 R. 5. In sense 'for, in favour of, on the side of'.

This use is entirely modern, and has no precedent or analogy in Latin. It appears to have arisen from the use of pro in PRO B. i b, or in PRO AND CON. To a certain extent, combinations with pro- take the place of those with PHILO-, as philosophy, philosophy. They appear to have begun c 1825, but to have been comparatively rare up to 1896, since which date they have swarmed in the journalistic press, usually in antithesis to formations in anti- expressed or understood. Pro-Boer and anti-Boer were terms of opprobrium during the South African War, 1899-1902.

a. Prefixed to a sb, sb phr, or adj., forming adjs with sense 'favouring or siding with (what is indicated by the second element)'; as pro-alien, -American, -annexation, -Asiatic, -Boer, -British, -Catholic, -Chinese, -clerical, -educational, -English, -foreign, -French, -Irish, -Japanese, -moral, -negro, -opium, -papist, -patronage, -popery, -rebel, -Russian, -slavery, -tariff reform, -transubstantiation, -Turk, -Turkish, -war, etc. Where the form of the second element permits, as in pro-Boer, pro-Catholic, pro-negro, pro-papist, pro-Turk, these are also used as sbs. = 'one who is on the side of, or favours... as pro-Boarder (one in favour of a School Board), -breacher (a partisan of breeches), -flogger (one who favours flogging), -slaver (a pro-slavery man), -pro-liquorist (one in favour of the unrestricted sale of alcoholic drinks). c. In comb. with a sb. or adj. (or directly from those in a.) + -ism, forming abstract sbs. = 'the principle or character of being in favour of... as pro-alcoholism, -Boerism, -capitalism, -clericalism, -Russianism, -Senutism, -slaveryism. Many of these are of opprobrious or hostile use.

Pro- (pro-, pro-), repr the Gr preposition πρὸ, meaning 'before' (of time, position, preference, priority, etc.), forming in Greek many compounds—verbs, substantives, and adjectives. Of the sbs. and their derivatives more than 60 were adopted in late Latin as technical terms of rhetoric, philosophy, natural history, art, and Jewish or Christian religion (e.g. problema, proboscis, prodonus, prolepsis, prologus, propheta (prophēta, prophēticus, prophētiāre), prophitis, proscennium, prostylus, prolassis). With the revival of learning many more Greek terms were latinized. Many of these latinized forms of both periods have been adopted or adapted in the modern languages generally, and have subsequently served as models for the formation of new combinations from Greek (less commonly from Latin) elements, in the nomenclature of modern science and philosophy. The older and more important of the English words so derived appear in their alphabetical order as Main words. Those in which pro is more obviously a prefix to a word itself used in English, or which are merely technical terms, follow here.

1845 GLADSTONE Glean (1879) VII. 192 Probabilism is by no means the universal or compulsory doctrine of the Roman theologians. It is confronted by a system called Probabiliorism which teaches that, when in doubt among several alternatives of conduct, we are bound to choose that which has the greatest likelihood of being right 1882-3 *Schaff's Encycl. 3. In criminal jurisdiction A system of dealing (chiefly) with young persons found guilty of crimes of lesser gravity, and esp. with first offenders, wherein these, instead of being sent to prison or otherwise punished, are released on suspended sentence during good behaviour, and placed under the supervision of a probation officer, who acts as a friend and adviser, but who, in case of the failure of the probationer to fulfil the terms of his probation, can report him back to the court for the execution of the sentence originally imposed.

The term has been in use in parts of U.S., as Massachusetts, since 1878, and has more recently been used also in Great Britain.

State Probation Commission* 7 Oct., Since the year 1878 in Massachusetts, and now in most of the commonwealths of the United States, persons found guilty of crimes (usually of the rank of misdemeanors...) have instead of being sent to a penal institution, been placed on probation. The term of probation varies from a few weeks to over a year. Probation officers are either salaried by public authorities or serve as volunteers so far as their official status is concerned. The term originally employed in this country is 'to place on' or 'under probation', 'to put on' or 'under probation'. Ibid. The expression 'probation-law' is coming into usage. The State of New York has recently established a 'Probation Commission'.

3. In a University, one of two or more officers periodically elected by the members of the University or one of its constituent sections, whose duties have varied at different times and in different places. The primary function of the office seems to have been representative, esp. in law-suits, and in the administration of corporate funds.

a. In reference to mediæval (and Scottish) universities, an occasional anglicized form of the L. term procurator actually used. See PROURATOR 3. 1895 RASHDALL Univ. Europe in Middle Ages I. 375 (Paris) The first document in which the Rector and Proctors are clearly distinguished from one another is a Statute of the Faculty of Arts in 1245. Ibid. II. 121 [At Montpellier] as at Oxford, the Masters are more directly represented by the two Proctors, the office circulating among them. The functions of these Proctors were primarily financial, as originally were those of the Proctors of Paris and Oxford. Ibid. 298 [At St. Andrews] The Masters and students—divided into the Four Nations of Fife, Lothian, Angus, and Britain, each with its Proctor—elected the Rector. Ibid. 306 [At Glasgow] Only on occasions of the Rectorial elections was the organization of Nations and student Proctors called into actual existence—for which purpose it has lasted down to the present day.

b. In modern use, as at Oxford and Cambridge, each of two officers appointed annually to discharge various functions in connexion with the meetings of the University and its various Boards, the examinations and conferment of degrees, and the like; they are also charged with the discipline of all persons in statu pupillari, and the summary punishment of minor offences.

In the old English Universities, they were formerly called Northern and Southern Proctor respectively (see PROCURATOR 3), they are now distinguished as Senior and Junior Proctor, in accordance with their university seniority. They are appointed or elected by the various colleges in rotation. At Oxford they are the representatives of the body of Masters of Arts, and, as such, are assessors to the Chancellor or Vice-Chancellor, and ex-officio members of the Heldomodal Council and of almost all University Boards and Delegacies; they exercise a joint veto upon the proceedings and decrees of Congregation and Convocation, ask graces for degrees in the Ancient House of Convocation, nominate delegates not otherwise specially appointed, supervise the examiners and examinations conjointly with the Vice-Chancellor, and concur with him in the conferring of all degrees. At Cambridge their powers and functions are similar, but less extensive. Proctors also exist with certain functions at Dublin and at Durham.

II. 4. A public teacher or instructor of the highest rank in a specific faculty or branch of learning; spec. one who holds an endowed or established 'chair' in a university or one of its colleges. Also frequently applied to the tutors or lecturers on the staff of theological and other professional or technical colleges, academies, and seminaries.

In the medieval European Universities, at first simply a synonym of Magister or Doctor (degrees being originally qualifications to teach); but in this use not common as an English word. The right originally possessed by any Master or Doctor to teach publicly in the schools of his Faculty was, gradually restricted to an inner circle of teachers, and the term Professor came eventually to be confined to the holders of salaried or endowed teaching offices, or to the highest class of these, such appellations as Reader, Lecturer, Instructor, being given to teachers of lower rank. In the old English Universities the ancient usage survives in the letters S.T.P. (Sacrae Theologiae Professor) for D.D.; the modern use is largely due to the creation of five Ragius or King's Professors by Henry VIII (a number in recent times increased to seven). The endowed teachers of some other subjects were at first called praelectores, but this has gradually been superseded by professor. See RASHDALL Univ Europe Med Ages I. 21, etc.

Hence, each of such rays, or of such points of the resulting figure, is said to be the projections of a point of the original one; or the whole resulting figure is said to be the projection of the original.

LOW Machina Draw (1892) 123 Whilst the notion of projection had been imparted, projection lines being drawn, yet the student had utterly failed to realise from the sketches the form of the object he was drawing.

b. Chartography A representation on a plane surface, on any system, geometrical or other, of the whole or any part of the surface of the earth, or of the celestial sphere, any one of the many modes in which this is done.

The earlier modes were actually the result of geometrical projection, but the name has been extended to representations which lie quite outside the etymological sense.

The projections (in this extended sense) that have been used to represent the whole, the half, or parts of the earth's surface, are more than thirty; they have been classified by Major C. F. CLOVE (Sketch of Map Projections, 1901, Text-book of Topogr. & Geogr. Surveying, 1905, xi) under the following heads: I. ORTHOMORPHIC (conform, or conformable), preserving the forms of areas (but not their relative sizes); II. Equal area (equivalent, or surface true), in which equal areas of the surface are represented by equal areas on the map, but the forms of these, when large, are distorted; III. Perspective, representing the surface as seen from some point of view at the centre, on the surface, or at various distances from it; IV. ZONAL (q. v.), V. CONICAL (q. v.), VI. CYLINDRICAL (q. v.), VII. Conventional, produced by arbitrary rules for convenience of drawing and the approximate representation of a number of properties, such as the globular, commonly used in school maps of the two hemispheres. Of the varieties in actual use, many belong to two, and some to three of these classes, thus Mercator's projection is orthomorphous and cylindrical. For gnomonic, homolographic, orthographic, polyconic, sinusoidal, stereographic, etc. projections, see these adjs. Many projections are also named after their inventors, as Mercator's, Bonne's (modified conical equal area), Sanson-Flamsteed's (sinusoidal equal-area), Airy's (balance of errors), Cassini's (rectangular co-ordinate) used in the 1-inch Ordnance Maps of England, and 6 inch of Great Britain, the six different projections of Lambert, etc. For these see the works cited above, and other special treatises.

(1635) 182 (Polar projection) This kind of projection, though more unusual, wants not his special use in describing the parts of the Earth near the Pole. 1669 STURMY Mariner's Mag. ii. viii. 73 Charts, according to Mercator's or Wright's Projection. 1704 J. HARRIS Lex. Techn. I. Projection of the Sphere in Plane, is a true Geometrical Delineation of the Circles of the Sphere, or any assigned Parts of them, upon the Plane of some one Circle; as on the Horizon, Meridian, Equator, Tropic, etc. Ibid., Polar Projection, is a Representation of the Earth, or of the Heavens, projected on the Plane of one of the Polar Circles. 1706 PHILLIPS (ed. Kersey) s. v. Astrolabes, Quadrants, Sun-dials, Maps, &c., are Projections of the Sphere; which are of three sorts, viz. Gnomonick, Orthographic and Stereographic. 1796 MONRO Amer. Geog. I. 56 General maps are projected upon the plane of some great circle, and from this circle the projection is said to be meridional, equatorial, or horizontal. 1866 PROCTOR Handbk. Stars 12 Note, The term projection has come to be applied in mapping to any mode of construction founded on some definite geometrical principle. 1867 DENISON Astron. without Math. 13 In Mercator's projection, which is a favourite one for maps, the globe is supposed to be stretched out on the inside of a cylinder which touches it all round the equator, and the cylinder is then cut and opened out flat or 'developed'. 1905 C. F. CLOVE Topogr. & Geogr. Surveying xi. 92 The term projection, though sanctioned by long usage, is an unfortunate one. The great majority of useful map projections are not obtained in any geometrical way. A map projection is to be treated as the representation on a plane, by any law, of the terrestrial meridians and parallels.

c. Cryst. The projection of a point in each face of a crystal upon an imaginary containing sphere, called the sphere of projection.

From the centre of the sphere a line is drawn perpendicular to each face of the crystal, so that to each of these there corresponds a point on the sphere; a plane map of the sphere showing all these points is called a projection of the crystal.

1878 GURNEY Crystallogr. 32 The diameter of the sphere of projection which is at right angles to the zone plane is called the zone axis. 1895 STORY-MASKELYNE Crystallogr. ii. 27 On the sphere of projection, and the principles of its stereographic representation. Ibid. 28 Fig. 9 represents in orthographic projection the faces and the poles of the cuboctahedron. Ibid. 29 The plane of projection thus bounded by a great circle of the sphere is represented by the plane of the paper on which the circle is drawn, which latter will be termed the circle of projection or primitive circle.

8. The action of projecting, or fact of being optically projected, as a figure or image, against a background; see PROJECT v. 9 b.

b. Capable, as two plane figures, of being derived one from the other by projection.

1885 LEUBESDORF Cremona's Proj. Geom. 107 If P is the point of intersection of QS and RT, then ATPR is a projection of ACAB' from Q as centre, and ATPR is also a projection of ABA'C' from S as centre; therefore the group ACAB' is projective with ABAC', and therefore with AC'AB'. Ibid. 163 If the point S is such that tangents can be drawn from it to the conic, each of them will be a self-corresponding line of the two projective series of tangents abc... and a'b'c'.

c. Projective property, a property (of a figure) which remains unchanged after projection. Projective Geometry, that branch of Geometry which deals with projective properties.

1885 LEUBESDORF Cremona's Proj. Geom. 50 Projective Geometry, dealing with projective properties (i.e. such as are not altered by projection), is chiefly concerned with descriptive properties of figures. Since the magnitude of a geometric figure is altered by projection, metrical properties are as a rule not projective. But there is one important class of metrical properties (anharmonic properties) which are projective, and the discussion of which therefore finds a place in the Projective Geometry. 1908 Athenaeum 21 Mar. 359/2 'On the Projective Geometry of some Covariants of a Binary Quintic', by Prof. E. PERSONAL pronouns of the first and second persons (I, thou, pl. we, you, with their cases) stand instead of the names of the speaker and the person spoken to. Those of the third person (he, she, it, they, with their cases, originally demonstratives) avoid the repetition of a name already mentioned or indicated. INTERROGATIVE pronouns (who? what? which?) ask the name, etc. of a person or thing unknown. RELATIVE pronouns (who, which, that) combine the function of a personal or demonstrative pronoun with that of a conjunction, and subordinate one sentence or clause to another, as 'I met a friend who told me' for 'I met a friend, and he told me'. POSSESSIVE pronouns are adjectives arising out of the original genitive case of personal pronouns. In Eng., as in many other modern languages, they have developed two forms, one absolute or strictly pronominal (mine, thine, ours, yours, etc.), the other adjectival (my, thy, our, your, etc.).

In addition to these, several definitive adjectives are very commonly used absolutely or pronominally, and classed as adjective pronouns or pronominal adjectives. These include the DEMONSTRATIVES, this (pl. these), that (pl. those), yon (or yonder), DISTRIBUTIVES, each, every, either, neither (of which every as a pronoun is now archaic), INDEFINITE numerals, etc., any, some, one, other (another), none, to which some add all, both, many, few, enough, such, when used absolutely. One is often used as an indefinite personal pronoun (ONE 20), and the words self and own, used to strengthen the personal and possessive pronouns, are sometimes classed with them.

Prop, sb. 4 U. S. [Derivation unknown] Usually in pl. Props. A name given to cowrite shells, used in a gambling game, and hence to the game itself, in vogue in New England chiefly from 1830 to the beginning of the Civil War.

Four of the shells were shaken in the hand or in a box, and thrown after the manner of dice on a table, the stake being won or lost according to the number of white or red sides coming up. 1. I. One who speaks for God or for any deity, as the inspired revealer or interpreter of his will; one who is held or (more loosely) who claims to have this function; an inspired or quasi-inspired teacher.

In popular use, generally connoting the special function of revealing or predicting the future. (Hence sense 5.)

The Greek προφήτης was originally the spokesman or interpreter of a divinity, e.g. of Zeus, Dionysus, Apollo, or the deliverer or interpreter of an oracle, corresponding generally to the Latin vates. By the LXX it was adopted to render the Heb. נביא nabi, in the O.T. it was applied indiscriminately to the prophets of Jehovah, of Baal and other heathen deities, and even to 'false prophets', reputed or pretended soothsayers. In the N.T. it is used in the same senses as in the LXX, but mainly applied to the Hebrew prophets of Jehovah, also to John the Baptist, as well as to certain persons in the Early Church, who were recognized as possessing more or less of the character of the old Hebrew prophets, or as inspired to utter special revelations and predictions; also applied historically to Balaam, and by St Paul, in the old Greek sense, to Epimenides the Cretan, while 'false prophets' are frequently mentioned. The Greek word was adopted in L. as propheta chiefly in post-classical times, and largely under Christian influence; and this is the regular rendering in the Itala, Vulgate, and Christian Fathers. From Ecclesiastical Latin it has passed down into the Romanic and Teutonic languages. In English the earliest uses are derived from the Scriptures, but the word is currently used in all the ancient senses and in modern ones derived from them.

3 pl. The prophetic writers or writings of the Old Testament.

By the Jews the Scriptures of the O T are divided into the Law (חוקים hukim), the Prophets (נביאים nebi'im), and the Writings or Hagiographa (כתובים ketubim). The Prophets are divided into the Former Prophets, including the books of Joshua, Judges, 1 and 2 Samuel, 1 and 2 Kings, and the Latter Prophets, incl. Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the twelve minor prophets, Hosea to Malachi. A compendious name for the O T Scriptures, often used in the N.T., was the Law and the Prophets or Moses and the Prophets. In Christian usage, the Prophets or Prophetic Books are the Latter Prophets of the Jews, with Daniel (which by the Jews is placed among the Hagiographa). Propionic (prɒpɪɪŋɪk), a. Chem. [ad. 1. propionique (Dumas, Malagute, & Leblanc 1847; Comptes Rendus XXV. 781), f. Gr. $\pi\rho\omicron$, PRO-2 (or $\pi\rho\alpha\tau\omicron$ first) + $\omega\iota\omega\nu$, $\mu\omega\nu$ -fat, in reference to its being the first in order of the actual fatty acids (formic and acetic acids, which precede it in the series, not forming unctuous derivatives).

From propionic are derived the names PROPANE, PROPENE, PROPYL, and the terms under PROPION-

1. Propionic acid, the monatomic monobasic acid of the propyl or tri-carbon series, the third acid of the fatty series, $\text{C}_3\text{H}_7\text{O}_2$, discovered by Gottlieb in 1844, and by him designated Metacetic acid. Its salts are PROPIONATES. Also in comb. as bromopropionic acid, etc.

Proteid (prote-tid). Chem. Also proteide. [f. PROTE (IN + -id).] A term applied in England from 1871 to the class of organic compounds previously known as 'protein bodies' or 'substances' (Ger. protein-stoffe), and now by preference called 'proteins'. see PROTEIN, and Note there.

1871 WATTS tr. *Gmelin's Handb. These substances appear to be a sort of natural antiseptic, possessing the power of destroying the bacilli of anthrax and other maladies. 1897 ALLBUTT's Syst. Med. II. 820 The work of this accomplished author [Weir Mitchell] on the venom of the rattlesnake, formed the first step in our knowledge of toxic proteids. 1897 WILLIS Flower Plants I. 207 The first downward step in the decomposition of protoplasm into proteids. 1907 *Recommendations of Committee in Proc. Proteid (prote-tid). Zool. rare. [f. mod. L. generic name Proteus + -id.] An amphibian of the family Proteidae, typified by the genus Proteus (PROTEUS 3 b). So Proteidean (prote-*tid*an) a., belonging to this group of amphibians.

Proteiform (prote-*if*im), a. [f. PROTE-US + *-i*FORM.] Changeable in form, or assuming many various forms, like the fabled Proteus or the 'proteus-animalcule'; protean, multiform, extremely variable or various.

SPENCER First Princ. II. xix § 152 (1875) 474 When we turn from these proteiform specks of living jelly, we find differences of tissue.

Protein (prote-tin). Also 9-ine. Chem. [a. F. protéine (Mulder 1838), Ger. protein, f. Gr. protos-primary, prime (so named as a primary substance or fundamental material of the bodies of animals and plants) · see -IN.] 1.]

† a. Name given by Mulder to a complex residual nitrogenous substance, of tolerably constant composition, obtained from casein, fibrin, and egg albumin, to which he assigned the formula $C_{40}H_{72}N_{10}O_{12}$, and which he regarded as the essential constituent of organized bodies, animal or vegetable (obs.). b. In current use, any one of a class of organic compounds, the proteins, consisting of carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, and nitrogen, with a little sulphur, in complex and more or less unstable combination; forming an important part of all living organisms, and the essential nitrogenous constituents of the food of animals; obtained as amorphous solids, differing in solubility and other properties, and usually coagulable by heat. Also called albuminoids, and very generally proteids (see PROTEID 1).

When the advance of chemical knowledge showed that there was no such definite compound as Mulder's 'protein', the albuminoid substances of which he had considered it to be the basis continued to be known as the protein bodies or substances, Ger. protein-stoffe (see c). To render the latter, the term proteids (at first proteid) was used by H. WATTS in 1871 in his translation of Gmelin's Handbook of Chemistry, also in the Journal of the Chemical Society, and the 12th ed. of Fownes' Chemistry, 1873, and became common (though not universal) in English use. Proteid had however in German been applied to designate compounds still more complex, e.g. haemoglobin (see Hoppe Seyler, Handb. Chem. ed. 5, 1883, 290). Thence arose confusion in nomenclature, to remedy which a Committee on Proteid Nomenclature was appointed, and in 1907 recommended the disuse of the term proteid in either sense, and the use of proteins as the collective name for the protein-stoffe or protein bodies. This recommendation was adopted by the International Congress of Physiologists at Heidelberg in the same year.

The simple proteins are the protamines, histones, albumins, and globulins (derivatives of which are fibrin and myosin). The combination compounds are the scleroproteins (e.g. gelatin and keratin), phosphoproteins (e.g. vitellin, caseinogen, and casein), conjugated proteins (incl. nucleo-proteins, gluco-proteins (e.g. mucin), chromo-proteins (e.g. haemoglobin). Derivatives of proteins are metaproteins (acid-albumin, alkali-albumin), improperly called 'albuminates'; proteoses (e.g. albumose, globulose, gelatose), peptones, polypeptides. See Journal of Physiology XXXV Proc. 26 Jan. 1907, pp. xvii-xx, and Proc. Chem. Soc. XXIII. 56.

But...there is no reason for bringing into prominence only the contrast between fibro-vascular and non-fibro-vascular masses (Epenchyma and Protenchyma); the protenchyma of Nageli therefore splits up, according to me, into three kinds [primary meristem, epidermal tissue, fundamental tissue] of equal value with his epenchyma. 1884 BOWEN & SCOTT De Bary's Phaner. 6
